

New Authority Parenting

Building Stronger Families

www.newauthorityparenting.ie
tara@newauthorityparenting.ie

Non-Violent Resistance (NVR): An integrated, structured and systemic response to child to parent violence and abuse.

Tuesday, April 20th, 2021 (9.30 - 4.30)
&
Wednesday, April 21st, 2021 (9.30-4.30)

Training in the NVR model is delivered over two days. Completing this training will support practitioners to understand, identify and respond to Child to Parent Violence and Abuse (CPVA) – an increasing concern in child and family work. On completion of this course, you will have an understanding of CPVA and will be ready to use this model with parents who have lost their authority in the relationship with their child.

There is growing evidence that building or restoring parental authority through NVR is also proving to be successful in addressing other parenting challenges - child and adolescent anxiety, adolescent substance misuse, and threats of suicide. NVR has also been used to address conflict in foster care and residential settings.

The training is provided by Tara Kelly and Madeleine Connolly (see bio's below).

This training will be delivered online via Zoom. Slides, articles and resources will be forwarded to those who attend within one week of training. A certificate of attendance will be given to participants who attend both days in full.

Cost of training: €210 per person

For further information and booking form, contact Tara Kelly at

tara@newauthorityparenting.ie

Madeleine Connolly

Madeleine is a Family Psychotherapist and Senior Psychiatric Social worker specialising in parenting & child and adolescent mental health and well-being. She has over three decades of working with children, parents and families. Parent education and support with responding to challenging behaviour, living with autism, parenting when separated/divorced and child-to-parent-violence and abuse are areas of special interest for Madeleine. In addition to qualifications in Social Work , Family Therapy & Early Childhood Care and Education, she has trained in evidence based parent education programmes and provides training, lecturing and consultation in her areas of expertise. In addition to qualifications in Social Work , Family Therapy & Early Childhood Care and Education, she has trained in evidence based parent education programmes and provides training, lecturing and consultation in her areas of expertise.

Tara Kelly

Tara holds a Diploma in Applied Social Studies (DIT), a MSc in Child Protection and Welfare (Trinity College, Dublin) and is currently a Doctoral Researcher in NUI Galway where she is researching parental experiences of both Child to Parent Violence and Abuse and Non Violent Resistance as an intervention. Tara has worked with children and families for almost thirty years – in residential care, foster care and the wider community. She currently manages a Family Support Service in Tusla and is co-founder of New Authority Parenting. Tara has extensive experience of working with parents who feel they have lost their authority and would like to build a better relationship with their child. She is an NVR practitioner and provides supervision and consultation in this work. She has trained more than 500 practitioners in using this model.